1.2.4 Internal Assessment Mechanism

The Internal Assessment mechanism plays a vital role in evaluating the continuous academic progress of students throughout the academic year. It is designed to assess not only students' theoretical knowledge but also their practical skills, regularity, classroom participation, and overall academic engagement, ensuring a comprehensive evaluation process.

The system comprises multiple assessment components such as class tests, assignments, seminars, presentations, classroom participation, attendance, practical examinations, and project work, depending on the nature and requirements of the course. This diversified approach promotes continuous learning and minimizes over-reliance on end-semester examinations.

At the beginning of each academic session, students are clearly informed about the internal assessment guidelines, marks distribution, evaluation criteria, and assessment schedule. Class tests are conducted at regular intervals to monitor students' understanding of the syllabus and to identify learning gaps at an early stage.

Seminars and presentations are incorporated to enhance communication skills, subject comprehension, analytical ability, and confidence. Attendance and active participation are considered as part of internal assessment to encourage discipline, responsibility, and active involvement in the teaching-learning process. The internal assessment process is transparent, systematic, and periodically reviewed to ensure fairness and effectiveness, thereby supporting outcome-based education and improving overall academic performance.
